Therefore, I was right that the test is not just a common sense wind warning meaning dangerous wind speeds..... not a single windspeed youre says can be classified as anything more than a windstorm – I was talking about a strong wind warning all the time, if it was just a wind storm, it would take the wind warning seriously, shut up, you have no idea what youre is saying, let alone argue the point. – great point totally related how old are you? Your reading comprehension tells me that you could not be older than 16 years. – just by your icon you are a 14 year old trend bitch, still unrelated though I never told you. I told others: look back at what I wrote. in what world does the Coast Guard have an infinitely unlimited number of rescue vessels and personnel? You call an ambulance because you sprained your ankle when you dropped a run, or Knee? – Maybe its just me, but personally I think flipping a boat is a little more serious than scratching my knee and I believe the Coast Guard will be able to ask appropriate questions to rank the severity on other calls. Calls, the test is designed for everyone, anyone in Canada who has a desire to operate a ship must have this test. You personally may not think that you know what the specific wind speed is called, but to operate any ship outside a small lake is relevant information. –It's important to know the order yes, but knowing the exact value really doesn't matter that much and I drove boats from the northern tip of Vancouver Island, and not once did you know the exact value needed (ps, if you had any common sense at all, youd pretty quickly come to the conclusion that the wind and weather is not consistent, and windspeed does not stay at constant speed, therefore they give a number of windspeeds a name or classification if you want, because to report on the weather, hearing gale force and know exactly what the general range of wind speed will be rather than listening to approximately forty-one to forty-seven nautical miles per hour is a lot easier, more conceid, and you get the information you want much faster – hearing the gale force wind means getting out of the water, knowing if it's 40 or 41 really doesn't matter if you are driving a very large vessel, in which case it is highly unlikely that an online boaters test is the only certification you would own. Again. You have no idea what you're talking about. Stop arguing and catching straws. youre idiot – I still have no idea what he's saying to them because I shot down every point he introduced.....
